Aristotle
(384 BCE - 322 BCE)

Aristotle was a famous philosopher from ancient Greece who lived over 2,300 years ago. He was a student of Plato and later became a teacher, guiding important figures like Alexander the Great. Aristotle is known for his writings on many subjects, including science, ethics, and politics.

Unlike Plato, who focused on ideas, Aristotle believed in studying the real world to learn. He thought it was important to observe and ask questions, which helped create the way we do science today. Aristotle also asked big questions like, "What is the best way to live?" and believed that living a good life leads to true happiness.

Aristotle started a school called the Lyceum, where he taught students about philosophy and science. His ideas have shaped how we think about knowledge, ethics, and the world for many years.