YOUR SPEECH

sood morning everyone.

My name is Gavin McCormack, and today I want to talk about a choice we all face: the environment or money. It's like being at a crossroads, where one path leads to a green, thriving planet, and the other to a world filled with cash but no clean air to breathe or water to drink.

We live in a world where money talks. It builds skyscrapers, powers industries, and drives economies. But at what cost? Our forests are shinking, oceans are polluted, and our air, well, it's not as fresh as it used to be. It's like we're trading green trees for green bills, and it's not fait rade.

Some might say, "But we need money to live," True, but what's the use of money if our planet becomes unlivable? We can earn more money, but can we create another Earth? No. Once our environment is damaged, it's almost impossible to bring it back. Remember, we're not just talking about our future, but the future of every plant, animal, and human being on this planet. It's about those polar bears losing their homes because of metting ice, the birds that can't find clean air to fly in, and us, struggling to find pure water to drink.

Choosing the environment over money doesn't mean we give up on development. It means we find a balance. It's about sustainable practices, green technologies, and most importantly, making choices that help our planet heal.

In the end, it's not just about saving the environment; it's about saving ourselves. Money can be earned and spent, but a healthy planet is priceless. So, let's make the right choice, not just for us, but for every living thing sharing this beautiful Earth with us.

Thank you.
